Seeded
hand sown.

We continually strive to be a stronger, more responsible company in how we do business in Tanzania. This effort has culminated in the opening of a new, dedicated worker-owned co-op workshop, funded by Seeded Hand Sown. We are thrilled to have this opportunity to grow the economic opportunities of beadwork artisans in Tanzania. We created a business model making all co-op members part owners of the shoe workshop--further cultivating our mission to grow opportunities for economically vulnerable people.

We have transitioned to two new leather colors this season--a light brown and black leather, both sourced from pastoralist herders in the Tanzanian highlands. We have also rolled out new metallic colorways in our best-selling Serengeti Collection, showing the beauty of East African beadwork in a more subtle palette.

Tony and Caroline moved to Tanzania in 2013 for Tony's work in economics for the US Fulbright Program. After living and traveling in Tanzania for a year, they were struck by the lack of economic opportunities for women in Tanzania. They founded Seeded Hand Sown to work in partnership with women artisans, aiding in their efforts to create a more stable life for themselves and their families.

The Seeded Hand Sown team is excited to have this opportunity to tell their story and share their skills with you. We are proud to continue the tradition of East African sandal-making, and to open up opportunities to use business to create a more just and prosperous world.
